- Second Lieutenant Henry Leslie Paxton Balderson, Devonshire Regiment, attached 1/6 Gloucestershire Regiment, KIA 23rd July 1916, age 24. Son of Robert Henry and Edith Balderson, of South Lea, Hemel Hempstead, Herts.

Henry Balderson enlisted as a part-time soldier, known as a Special Reservist, in 1911. He was then aged 18 and was training to be an accountant, working in Tower Hill in London. Being in the Special reserve meant attending training for as much as a month a year, at an army camp. It also meant joining the regular army as a full-time soldier if war broke out. So in August 1914, Balderson joined the 28th London Regiment, known as the Artists' Rifles. In little more than a month his officer potential had been recognised and he was transferred to the 8th Devonshire Regiment as a Second Lieutenant. Balderson's battalion was sent to France in July 1915, and he received a gun shot wound in action at Loos on 25th September 1915. As a result, Balderson was sent back to England it was not until May 1916 that he was fit for service.

Balderson was sent back to France in late June 1916, and was soon transferred to the 1/6th Gloucestershire Regiment. When the battalion played its part in the battle of the Somme, at Ovillers, Balderson was reported missing on 23rd July 1916. The battalion attacked soon after midnight, and immediately faced very heavy German machine gun fire. Meanwhile, the Germans fired shells which made it difficult for the wounded to be brought back to British lines. The officer who wrote the battalion War Diary said, 'The cause of the failure was in my opinion the lack of artillery preparation. None of the M.G.s [machine guns] ... had been knocked out and the enemy line had hardly been shelled at all.'

When Balderson's mother received the notice of that she would have had no certainty over whether or not he was dead. A month later, 24th August, she received a telegram saying that her son was dead. In her efforts to try to find out more, she was told at one point by the 1/6th Gloucestershires that they did not have any record of him serving in the battalion. That can only have confused his mother who was waiting for news.

At the end of the war, as the Commonwealth War Graves Commission tried to establish where all graves were, Balderson's body was found to be near to Pozieres, but not with other British graves. So his body was moved to the Pozieres British Cemetery. [Source: National Archive Kew, WO 95/2758, 1/6th Gloucestershire Regiment & WO 339/21495 File on H.L.P. Balderson.]

- Private 40312 William Edward Barber, 2nd Northamptonshire Regiment, KIA 24th April 1918, age 29. Husband of Emily A. Barber, of 220, London Rd., Hemel Hempstead, Herts.

Private Barber was killed at a stage of the war when the allies had just about held off a German advance which had, at one point, looked as if it might lead to a German victory. That was launched on 21st March 1918 and it was a month before the allies could truly claim to have stopped the Germans. However, even by 24th April, there was still heavy fighting on the frontline. There were two occasions that day when Private Barber could have been killed. The first, in the very early hours, was when his battalion was shelled with both gas and high explosives, while resting in a wood called the 'Bois de Blaney'. Several men were killed during this that bombardment. Later in the day, at 9.15pm, the battalion was ordered to take part in an attack on German lines at Villers-Brettonneux. Two Australian battalions led the charge, with the 2nd Northamptonshires following behind. However, during the attack, the British and Australian soldiers became tangled in barbed wire (which had originally been set up by the allies). Before they found a gap in the line they suffered losses due to heavy

German machine gun fire. Once free of the wire, Barber's battalion successfully gained some ground. It was dark by this time which might have helped them to advance, but the Germans fire flares into the sky and this enabled the German machine guns to pick out targets more easily. Casualties were very heavy and the attack was called off. Even during the retreat, the 2nd Northamptonshires lost men to more German machine gun fire. Over night, the men dug new shallow trenches to allow them to hide from the machine guns. A British tank joined the battle the next day and this helped to push the Germans back in some areas. - Rifleman 41894 Harry William Freeman 2nd Royal Irish Rifles, KIA 24th March 1918, age 20. Son of James Thomas and Louisa Freeman, of Fireman's Cottages, Apsley Mills, Hemel Hempstead, Herts.

The 2nd Royal Irish Rifles was originally recruited from what is now Northern Ireland, especially in Belfast. But by 1918 it contained men from throughout the United Kingdom. Freeman had originally served in the Northamptonshire Regiment, in which he had won the Military medal. He had been transferred into the 2nd Royal Irish Rifles to make up for losses in that battalion. The battalion took part in the desperate effort to resist the German Spring Offensive which began on 21st March 1918. The German advance was fast and effective. All along the British lines, battalions were forced to retreat after making gallant efforts to hold up the Germans for as long as possible. Although the attack was eventually stopped after a month of bitter fighting, the Germans had come within 50 miles of Paris and it had looked that they might even win the war.

On 24th March, the battalion was at Cugny. At about 2pm in the afternoon, the Germans attacked with artillery and machine gun fire, supported by low-flying aeroplanes. When the German infantry arrived, many of the 2nd Royal Irish Rifles had fired all their bullets and were left with only their bayonets to fight with. That meant there was hand-to-hand fight and 150 men from the battalion faced this attack. Of those, 92 were killed, among them Harry Freeman. Robert Masterman was born on 23rd January 1896 and enlisted as a Private in the Bedfordshire Regiment about a month after war broke out. His personal records show that he was relatively tall for the time at just under six feet, with dark hair and brown eyes. After initial training he was sent first to the regiment's 7th battalion, and then the 6th, both of which were in England. When he had enlisted he was still at school, preparing for university entrance, but he had served in his school's Officer Training Corps (OTC). His school was Harrow, the famous public school, which would have meant that he came from a wealthy family. His background and his time in the OTC meant that he was soon picked out as being a potential officer. During his training he applied for university, winning a scholarship to Hertford College, Oxford, which would have been taken up after the war. On being made a Lieutenant he joined the 9th Royal Lancashire Fusiliers which left Liverpool aboard a ship on 5th July 1915, headed for the Gallipoli Peninsula on the coast of Turkey where Britain was fighting the Turkish army. The battalion arrived there on 6th August 1915. Conditions were very tough there, which many men falling ill, and after nearly two months, Masterman's time at Gallipoli was short as he caught dysentery was led to serious diarrhoea. He was sent back to England on 3rd October 1915 on a ship called the Carisbrook Castle. The sea voyage lasted just over three weeks. Masterman was in hospital in Oxford until January 1916 when he was fit enough to join another battalion of the Lancashire Fusiliers, the 19th, which had been in France for two months. On 1st July 1916, the 19th Lancashire Fusiliers were part of the advance on the Somme, in the area of Authille Wood, close to Thiepval. When they arrived in the wood they heard from another battalion (1st Dorsets) which had been in an earlier stage of the attack, that British losses were heavy, but there was no question of turning back. As the battalion left the wood they came under heavy German machine gun fire. On reaching the first line of German trench taken by the British they found that it was so crowded with men who had tried to advance earlier that it could take no more soldiers. They sent a message back to the Brigade headquarters and were told simply to wait and not to send any more men forwards. Masterman had already been killed in this initial advance. The battalion held its position until being sent back behind the lines for rest later in the evening of 1st July. Of the 20 officers and 577 men who had gone into battle in the morning, about half were casualties of whom two officers and 38 men were dead. The battalion war diary noted, "Throughout the operation the Battalion behaved with the greatest steadiness, and the advance was carried out without hesitation on the part of the men – in spite of the intense artillery and machine gun enfilade fire." [Source: WO 95/2394, War Diary of 19th Lancashire Fusiliers.]

Masterman's Captain sent a letter home to his sister which said, "He was killed when leading his men to attack the enemy trenches. The ground we had to cross was swept by heavy machine gun fire and I am sorry to say that your brother was hit just before he got up to the enemy's wire. He led his men with great dash and was such a brave fellow. He had not been with us long, but during that short time he had become most popular with us all." [Source: Harrow School Magazine.]
